Reserve Battalions

Introduction

In January 1917, the personnel of the numerous Canadian battalions in England were placed in twenty-six new reserve battalions. Each of these new battalions was composed of men from the same military district in Canada and the battalion reinforced infantry battalions in France which had been mobilized in the same military district. Three engineers reserve battalions were formed in May and August 1918 after the Canadian Engineers Training Depot was reorganized as the Canadian Engineers Training Centre.
